1. Political parties and groups in Indonesian Timor are not very active. Communist activity is also insignificant. There is no curfew because the internal security situation is stable with few crimes being committed.
2. Former Royal Netherlands Indonesian Army (RNIA) soldiers, who have been demobilized and returned to their homes, influence the local affairs on the island. The feudal princes continue to exercise authority over the people.
3. Rice from Java and Makassar and textiles from Java and Singapore are imported through Kupang to meet local needs. Smuggling activities are not in evidence on Indonesian Timor, although some smuggling is believed to be carried on through Portuguese Timor and Flores. Illegal traffic in medicines, particularly penicillin, is allegedly going on through the port of Dilly, Portuguese Timor.
4. LIONG Moi Sun, a Chinese merchant, travels around from Dilly to Indonesian Timor, Djakarta, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Japan. Ostensibly, he is a businessman, but he may be a Communist.
